Casi todo lo que el cliente de una plataforma cripto singapurense puede esperar está escrito en las condiciones de servicio de la plataforma. El análisis de la propiedad del capítulo I le dice que los tokens pueden ser objeto de propiedad. El análisis del trust del capítulo II le dice si la plataforma los mantiene por su cuenta. Todo lo demás es contrato: desde el precio al que se ejecuta una orden hasta las circunstancias en que la plataforma puede bloquear una cuenta, anular una operación o cerrar una posición. El Derecho contractual de Singapur es el Derecho contractual inglés con modificaciones legales locales. La única decisión de apelación que lo aplica a una plataforma cripto, Quoine v B2C2, merece un estudio detenido, porque muestra cómo aborda un tribunal unas condiciones generales cuando los importes son elevados y la tecnología poco conocida.
